This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

Preface and Directions.

The teaching in this, as in all preceding Readers, is presented in one-part exercises; but in this book the exercises have been selected from the works of the great teachers of the vocal art, and are given with piano accompaniment.

Brief one-part exercises, also frequently selected, precede these advanced solfeggios, and prepare the way for them; and songs are selected to illustrate the previous teaching. These songs are eminently adapted for careful and progressive study.

The pupil will not only feel the pleasure which beautiful melody affords, but he will be conscious of a growing appreciation of good music, and feel the deep satisfaction which increasing power and skill always give.

It has been the aim of the authors from the beginning, to bring to the study of music the best and highest from all fields, and to afford not only temporary benefits, but to open the way to a life-long enjoyment of the art. That this object may be realized the pupils are taught to appreciate, as well as to do. That they may be taught to do, they are supplied with abundant, easy material for sight practice. That they may be taught to appreciate, they are brought in contact with work that requires careful study, and which yields its true beauty only to those who faithfully persevere to the end. With this last thought in view, a considerable number of artistic songs for one and two voices has been introduced for study, not for a day, but for many days. They are models by which the taste may be formed or educated.

As an individual can sing but one part, it is evident that the study of exercises for a single voice affords all the rhythmic and tonal teaching possible. There is great advantage in teaching in this way, as, owing to the freedom which absence of other parts gives, the music in one part may be much more advanced. A study of three-part exercises, as generally given, shows that freedom of melody and rhythm has been sacrificed to harmony. This truth is illustrated in this book; the three-part exercises generally being free from rhythmic difficulty if the harmony is at all complicated; but in Section II a series of solfeggios has been prepared which is calculated to give full scope to the powers of both pupils and teacher. These solfeggios are in three parts, but no attempt has been made to reduce them from their original high standard, and the mastery of them will give power for chorus singing of the best character.

This volume presents material of so advanced a character as to necessitate a careful preparation for each lesson by the study of the chart (Series G) which accompanies this book.

The chart references have been made very full, but there are still many important matters for review: The teacher is, therefore, urged to study the chart by itself and to take up each exercise for practice, carefully noting the printed directions at the foot of the page.

Our thanks are due to Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. and G. Schirmer & Co. for copyrighted material.

Dictation.

The scale may begin on any staff degree. Do, or one of the scale, is called the key note. It is also called the tonic, or strong tone of the scale.

The scale derives its name from the name of the staff degree which represents the pitch of Do, or the tonic. Thus a scale beginning on g,  , is known as the scale of G.

The key signature is used to show the position of the key note.

One sharp placed on the fifth line, or F, indicates that Do is on the second line.

Two sharps, the first on F and the second on the third space or C; thus,  , indicate that Do occurs on the first space below and that the key is D.

Three sharps placed thus, , indicate that Do is on the second space and that the key is A.

Four sharps placed thus,  , indicate that Do is on the first line and that the key is E.

The pupils should now be required to write the scale through one octave in the keys given above.

Care should be taken in placing the key signature to put the sharps on the proper staff degrees, the names of which should be learned.

Exercises.

The written exercises should test the pupils' knowledge of the facts given above.

1. Require the pupils to write scales beginning on different staff degrees, and affix the proper key signature, e. g., write a scale placing the first note on the second space, and affix the proper key signature.

2. Require scales written, the name of the key note only being given, as: write the scale of D.

3. Give the key signature and require the pupils to place the key note and to write the scale, as; the signature is , write the scale.

New Facts.

When the scale begins on certain staff degrees flats are used to show the position of the key note.

Thus the scale beginning on the first space:  , requires a flat on the third line. The key is F.

A scale beginning on the third line flatted, , is shown by a second flat placed on the fourth space, thus:  , and the key is B flat (B♭).

A scale beginning on the fourth space flatted, thus:  , requires a third flat placed upon the second space, thus:  , and the key is E flat (E♭).

When the key note is upon A♭ a fourth flat is upon the fourth line, thus: , and the key is A♭.

Take note:

1. That the new flat occurs each time on Fa.
2. That the flat before it is on Do.
3. That the names of the staff degrees on which the flats occur in order are B, E, A, D.

The pupils should be required

1. To write scales beginning on the different staff degrees, as on E♭, and affix the proper signature.
2. To write the scales having the signature given; and in other ways tested. The sharp keys should also be reviewed.

Dictation.

The meaning of the different meter marks should be reviewed.

Thus; $\frac{2}{2}$ means that each full measure contains the value of two half notes, and two beats should be given to each measure, and the first note of the measure should be accented.

The various ways in which a $\frac{2}{2}$ measure may be filled should be illustrated as:  ; and the same forms of measures expressed in $\frac{2}{4}$ and $\frac{2}{8}$.

Three-two measure should be studied in the same way and compared with $\frac{3}{4}$ and $\frac{3}{8}$.

Measures written in one meter should be expressed in others until the kinds of notes and rests are perfectly familiar.

The four-four and six-eight meters also should be treated.

The pupils being familiar with the different meters, the teacher should sing or play simple rhythms, and call upon the pupils to tell whether they are two, three, four, or six part measure. Having decided what the meter is, the children should express what they hear in the parallel meters.

For example: if the teacher has employed three part measure the children should express what they hear in $\frac{3}{2}$, $\frac{3}{4}$, or $\frac{3}{8}$, or in all three if desired.

Vocal Drill.

As we sing the scale descending we think of the tones as being lower as we go down; and similarly, when we sing the scale ascending we think of each succeeding tone as higher than the one before it. This difference in tones which we distinguish by the words higher and lower, we call pitch.

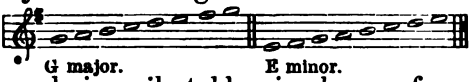
Dictation.

Every scale has what is called its relative minor scale. That is, if instead of beginning on Do of a given scale we begin on La and sing to La, we shall have what is called the normal minor scale; and since the key signature is unchanged it is said to be related to the major scale from which it is derived.

The relative minor, however, is considered to have La for its key note, and as the staff degree on which the key note occurs gives the name to the scale this scale is called E minor.



The name of the relative minor of any scale is easily told—simply pass from Do, the key note of the major, to La, and observe upon what staff degree it occurs, noticing at the same time if it bear a sharp or flat in the key signature. Thus:

1. The major scales should now be reviewed, written by direction, and in each case the relative minor written after it. The children should name the minor scales, noticing carefully the key signature.

---

2. The pupils should learn to give the signatures for the different minors, e. g. What is the key signature for E minor? The process of thought should be: if E, or the first line, is La, then the first space is Si, and the second line is Do. The second line, or G, being Do gives the key of G, signature one sharp, placed on the fifth line, and the scale of E minor appears thus:

For the purposes of music the tones produced by not fewer than forty nor more than four thousand per second are employed.

It has been ascertained by careful experiment just how many vibrations per second will produce each tone of the scale, and a rule has been found by which the vibrations for the other tones of the scale can be found from a given one.

Thus if we say that C is produced by a body vibrating at the rate of two hundred and fifty six times a second, high C will be produced by just twice that number, or five hundred and twelve vibrations.

Ex. 1. Ch. Ser. G. Pages 9 and 13.

The pitch of D will be found by multiplying the number of vibrations required for C by $\frac{9}{8}$. E will be found by multiplying the same number by $\frac{5}{3}$, F by $\frac{4}{3}$, G by $\frac{3}{2}$, A by $\frac{5}{3}$, B by $\frac{15}{8}$, and C by 2, as previously given.

If the staff degree on which the first, or key note, of the scale occurs bears a sharp or flat in the key signature the fact is indicated by adding the word sharp or flat in giving the name of the key. Thus a scale beginning on B (third line) in this case  would be the scale of B-flat.

Review.

Besides the sharps or flats used in the key signature we have sharps, flats, and naturals used as accidentals. Generally a sharp is used to indicate a higher pitch, and a flat is used to indicate a lower; but if a sharp or flat occurs in the key signature on the staff degree which we wish to affect, a natural (♮), a double sharp (𝄪), or a double flat (𝄫) may be required. Thus in this example  The first accidental indicates a higher pitch; the second, the natural (♮), removes the effect of the accidental sharp, and so indicates a lower pitch. The third accidental, the double sharp (𝄪), indicates a higher pitch. The double sharp is used because this staff degree bears a sharp in the key signature (the octave bears the sharp), and this fact requires us to use the double sharp. The next accidental, the natural (♮), indicates a lower pitch, as it removes the effect of the sharp on that staff degree in the key signature.

Exercises.

1. The pupils should now be required to write the different scales again and to tell the effect of accidentals given by the teacher.

2. The pupils should be required to tell why flats, naturals, sharps, double sharps, or double flats are used in certain cases.

3. Require the pupils to sharp every tone of the scale, by the use of accidentals, in the key of A♭.

4. Require them to flat every tone in the same scale.

The difference in pitch between two tones is called an interval. The intervals are named from the relation of the staff degrees that represent the two tones considered. Thus if we compare the tone represented by the first line of the staff with the one represented by the first space, we say that the interval is a second. If we compare the pitch represented by one line with the pitch represented by the next line either up or down, the interval is a third, and so on.

Ex. 6.

The name of any interval may be found by counting the staff degrees, calling the starting point one and including the other degree in the count, thus:

*Larghetto. Dolce.

Larghetto*, from the Italian word meaning broadly. It signifies a slow, majestic motion.

The interval from any note of the scale to the next above or below is called a second; but if we examine this exercise we shall find that seconds are not all alike,  for no chromatic tone can be placed between three and four or seven and eight of the scale, or in other words the staff degrees lettered E and F, and B and C, represent pitches nearer together than the others do.

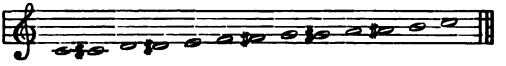
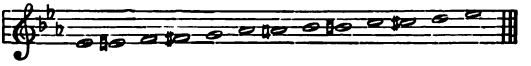
Chromatic Scale.

By the chromatic scale we mean a scale consisting of thirteen tones and included within one octave.

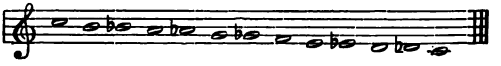


This is the chromatic scale ascending from C to its octave. In any other key the use of the double sharp (𝄪) or the natural (♮) would be necessary. Thus:



1. Explain the use of the sharps and naturals in this case.
2. Write the ascending chromatic scale from any other note to its octave.

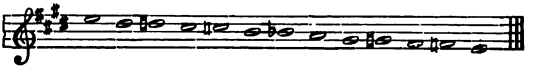
The descending chromatic scale may be expressed by the use of flats. Thus:



Descending chromatic scale in C.

From any other tone different accidentals would be required.

Thus:



1. Explain the use of the naturals in this case.
2. Write the descending chromatic scale in other keys.

Ex. 1. Ch. Ser. G. Pages 8 and 14.

Ex. 2. H. Lemoine.

If 256, the vibrations required for C, be multiplied by $\frac{9}{8}$ we have 288, the vibrations required for D. 288—256=32. If we multiply 256 by $\frac{5}{4}$ we have 320, the vibrations required for E, or 32 vibrations more than D. But multiplying 256 by $\frac{4}{3}$ we have $341\frac{1}{3}$, or the vibrations required to produce F, a difference of $21\frac{1}{2}$ vibrations, showing a lesser difference between E and F than is found between the other tones.

The seconds between C and D, and D and E, are called Major (large) seconds, while the seconds between E and F, and B and C, are called Minor (small) seconds.

Taking the scale beginning on C, and considering C to be Do, descend to La, and taking that for the first note of your scale sing to La, and note the effect.

The difference in these scales is due to the arrangement of the minor seconds in them. The second or La scale is called Minor. Whenever the position of the minor seconds of a scale is changed the effect is felt at once; and we usually recognize the change as being from major to minor, or minor to major, as the case may be.

We found that in the Normal Minor scale a minor second occurred between two and three and five and six (counting La as one of this scale)  . This arrangement of minor seconds is varied frequently, and another minor second produced. Thus the seventh tone of this scale is frequently raised by an accidental so that a third minor second occurs between seven and eight. Thus:  .

Raising this tone increases still more the interval between Fa and the next tone above. This interval was already a major second. Now it is more than that. It is called an augmented second. This form of the scale is called the Harmonic Minor. It contains three minor seconds.

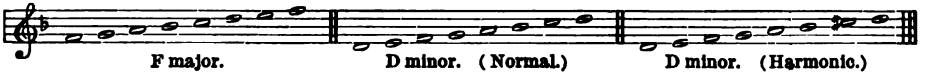
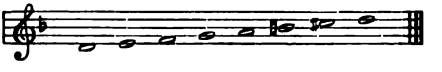
Dictation.

The minor scale already written is called the Normal Minor. By raising the seventh tone of this scale we get another form of the minor, called the Harmonic Minor.

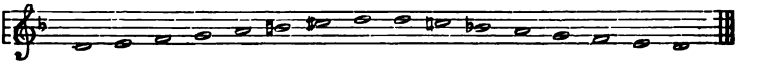
We should now review our knowledge of the Normal minor, and re-write the scales in the major, the relative Normal minor, and the relative Harmonic minor. Thus:



A third form of the minor scale is produced by raising the sixth as well as the seventh tones of the Normal minor. It is called the Melodic minor. Thus:



This scale differs from the other forms of the minor inasmuch as it takes another form in descending; the two raised degrees being restored to their natural pitches. Thus:



Write the ascending and descending Melodic minor in different keys.

Allegretto. Ch. Ser. G. Page 13. Selected.

The effect of the Melodic Minor scale can be easily produced by a slight change in the Major. Thus, if we consider the note which is La of the key of C to be Do, we have the key of A.  By lowering the third tone of this scale we have precisely what was represented before without any key signature. Thus:  gives the same effect as  Both representations should be familiar to the pupil.

Music by F. MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY.
(German composer, 1809–1847.)

NOTE. The arrangement of minor seconds on the plain staff is shown thus: and if Do be on C these minor seconds are in the right place. But if Do be placed on G, for instance, we find that one of the minor seconds is out of place

. That is, it occurs between six and seven instead of between seven and eight. To remedy this a sharp is placed in the key signature, upon four of this scale, or upon the staff degree lettered F. This sharp shows that that staff degree no longer represents its natural pitch but that it represents a pitch higher than before. This removes the minor second between six and seven, and at the same time makes one between seven and eight, thus giving a correct major scale beginning on G.

If we begin the scale on F, first space, we find that the minor seconds come thus:  . The first one is between four and five, instead of being between three and four. By making the third line of the staff represent a lower pitch we bring the minor second between three and four, and at the same time produce a major second between five and six. This restores the proper succession of tones for the major scale. The change is shown by placing a flat on the third line, thus:  .

In the representation of intervals upon the staff the name of the interval corresponds to the number of staff degrees embraced by the notes, counting the degrees upon which the notes are placed. Thus from Do to Mi is a third, and Mi is represented on the third staff degree from Do. Or if we consider the notes in reverse order, Do is on the third staff degree from Mi.

Seconds continued.—We find, however, that a major second may become augmented by raising or lowering the pitches of one or both of the staff degrees which represent it. Thus Sol Fa represents a major second; but if Sol be raised, thus:  we have an augmented second. This is the characteristic interval of the Harmonic Minor scale and is carefully considered on pages 11 and 18 of Chart Series G.

Dictation.

The dictation exercises should now include the writing of simple melodies from memory and the representation of rhythms which the teacher dictates. The special study suggested in this and succeeding lessons will refer directly to the study of chromatic tones by means of interval drill. See Chart Series G, pages 18 to 24, and preface of this volume.

Exercise.

1. Represent: 1, a major second; 2, a minor second up from each tone of the scale of C major.

2. Represent: 1, a minor second; 2, a major second down from each tone of the scale of C major.

3. Give the kind of second and tell whether it is up or down, as the teacher sings or plays the following:

The diatonic scale, as we have already learned, presents two kinds of thirds, the Major and the Minor. If, however, one of these tones composing a minor third should be brought still nearer the other by an accidental, we have a still smaller third, known as a diminished third.

Diminished thirds, therefore, are most likely to be represented thus:

Theme by I. J. PADEREWSKI, (arr.)

But the fourth from Fa to Si contains three major seconds, and is larger than the perfect fourth. It is therefore called the augmented fourth.

The effect of this fourth on the ear is so striking that very little practice enables us to distinguish it whenever given.

Note. The effect of the augmented fourth is so striking, and it is so important in modulation, that it should be very carefully learned. See Ch. Ser. G. Page 21.

When practicing the augmented fourth an almost irresistible impulse is felt to pass from it to the fifth. Thus as Fa Si is sung  the voice inclines to pass at once to Do, while if the reverse is sung, Si Fa  , the voice tends to pass to Mi.

The fourth like other intervals may be modified by accidentals, and all perfect fourths may be made augmented fourths. (See Chart Series G. No. 20.)

Again perfect fourths may be so affected by accidentals as to contain less than two major and one minor second. For instance, from Si to Mi is a perfect fourth.

The fifth from Do to Sol is called a perfect fifth. It contains three major seconds and one minor second. This is the pattern for all perfect fifths.

Doubtless the effect of the perfect fifth has been noticed many times when a violinist has been tuning his instrument. When in tune the violin strings give tones a fifth apart.

From Re to La is also a perfect fifth, and from Mi to Si, Fa to Do, Sol to Re, and La to Mi, likewise; but from Si to Fa includes both of the minor seconds of the scale and gives us the diminished fifth.

The diminished fifth and the augmented fourth are similar in effect. The study of the diminished fifth reveals the tendency of the voice to pass to the same tones that follow the augmented fourth, but in this case the voice progresses in the opposite direction.

Fifths, like all other intervals, may be affected by accidentals, by means of which all perfect fifths may be made diminished, and give the effect of Si, Fa in the scale.

Perfect fifths may be made into augmented fifths by accidentals, and the effect wholly changed.

Thus the fifth Do Sol may be made Do Ti

The study of sixths may be simplified by comparing them with thirds of which they are the complement.

By the complement is meant the interval which completes the octave. Thus from Do to Mi is a third, from Mi to Do is a sixth. Mi Do (up) is called the inversion of Do Mi.

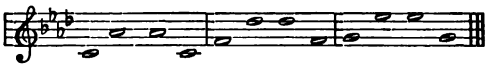
Sixths are known as major, minor, and augmented.

There are but three minor sixths in the diatonic scale. They are Mi Do, La Fa, Si Sol.



Sixths, like the other intervals, may be affected by accidentals; and all minor sixths may be made major, and all major sixths may be made augmented. See Chart Series G, page 22.

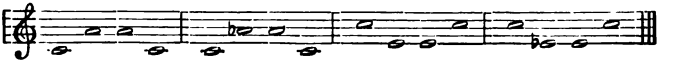
Dictation.

SIXTHS.

The pupils should be trained to distinguish intervals when the tones composing them are sounded together, as well as when sounded in succession. If there be no instrument at hand the class may be divided into two parts, one taking the lower and the other the upper notes.

1. Represent the major sixths in the key of C major.
2. Represent the minor sixths in the same key.
3. Name the intervals here given as the teacher sings them in irregular order.



Theme by Gaetano Nava.

The Alto and Bass Voices
By Joseph N. Ashton.

Ch. Ser. G. Pages 11 and 21.

Sevenths are major, minor, and diminished. There are but two major sevenths in the diatonic scale. They are Dó Si and Fa Mi.

Sevenths are subject to modification by accidentals just as the other intervals are. See Chart Series G, page 22.

If we invert any interval, the interval formed will be found by subtracting the first interval from nine. Thus a third inverted becomes a sixth, 9—3=6. A fourth inverted becomes a fifth, 9—4=5.

Dictation.

The pupils should be required to write any interval from a given tone up or down, e. g:

1. In the key of G: first, write a minor third up from Do or one; second, write a minor third down from the same note; third, write a perfect fourth up from the same; fourth, write an augmented fourth up from the same.

2. Name the intervals as the teacher sings.

THE NATURAL COURSE IN MUSIC

By

Frederic H. Ripley and Thomas Tapper

The Natural Course in Music consists of a carefully prepared series of Music Books and Charts, reasonable in price, and designed to cover the whole graded course in Primary and Grammar Schools. The plan contemplates the constant use of charts at first independent of the books and afterwards as a systematic preparation for the lessons to be learned from day to day in the Music Readers.

The Charts and the Readers are very closely related to each other. Their interdependence and correlation will be seen from the following outline:

1st year in Music—Chart Series A.
2d year in Music—Chart Series B..Music Primer, Part I.
3d year in Music—Chart Series C..Music Primer, Part II.
4th year in Music—Chart Series D..Music Reader, No. 1.
5th year in Music—Chart Series E..Music Reader, No. 2.
6th year in Music—Chart Series F..Music Reader, No. 3.
7th year in Music—Chart Series G..Music Reader, No. 4.
8th year in Music—Chart Series G..Music Reader, No. 5.
For Higher Grades and Classes.....Advanced Music Reader.

A Short Course in Music, consisting of Two Books, is published as follows:
